While the surface of the earth, and even

Not to speak of the revelations of modern geological inquiry, which is really in its beginning, we flud that the caverns of the world have, from most ancient times, been places of resort and admiring wonder Sometimes as dwellings an I refuge, as when Lot and his danghters escaped to the cavern of Monh mountains, and David cut off ; slice of Saul's coat in the cave of Adullam. down to the holes dug in the ground by the wretched victims of the siege of Vicksburg. Sometimes, and one of the earliest and continued uses, as sepulchres for the departed. as the cave of Machipelah, where Abraham and his house still are said to be piously kept under the Mahometan mosque of Haram, the parent of the modern catacombs of Italy and Egypt. Sometimes as the reception and hiding places of bandits and outlaws. Sometimes as the isolated homes of deluded monks and hermits. Sometimes as the consecrated temple of awful divinities, as the world renowned cave at whose mouth sat the Priestess of the Delphian oracles, or the more hideous shrines where human victims poured their blood upon the altar-

"The blood smeared mansion of gigantic Thor;" and sometimes as vast and unexplored mansions, grand, beautiful, and fantastic chain bers, exciting the wonder and delight of the multitudes who have, in all times, proved the element of our nature, which responds to the mysterious, beautiful, and sublime When one enters these tenantless halls,

The Big Salipetre cave of Marion, Mo. though unexplored, promises to yield a rich harvest to the ventures of the tourist. Ball's cave, Scholarie, New York, is noted for its twin lakes one ten feet above the other. Weir's cave, Staunton, Va. has probably acquired an unsurpassed reputation for bril liancy and varied display. But hitherto, when caves were mentioned, the Mammoth cave of Kentucky has had precedence of all others in the world for extent and diverse of jects of curious interest. It is said upon cave, printed authority to have been explored for ten miles, though that is questioned by the authority referred to It has never been cele brated for the beauty of its formations, but the running river and the eveless animals that inhabit earth and water within it, are certainly very marked curiosities

If these statements of the caves of the world, and especially of the Mammoth cave are correct, and they are not made without inquiry and some investigation of the subject, then if what we have heard of the cave we are going to visit be true, we shall not hesitate to say that Indiana holds the chief striking character of the objects revealed, in the old home of the Chief of the Wyandots.
